NAN OF THE NORTH

SYNOPSIS:

"The Volcano"

EPISODE NO. 14

Nan, Driscoll and Gaspard are saved from drowning in the ship's cabin as the tug boat draws up. Hays and his bandits have by this time reached shore in the small boat, and Nan and the others determine to follow them. The captain of the tug sends them ashore, but will not allow any of his men to accompany them, stating that nearby is a volcano that has been momentarily threatening to break out.

Night coming on, Driscoll, Nan, Gaspard and Igloo stop at an abandoned police outpost. Driscoll, stating that if he can only locate Hays that they could take him by surprise at daybreak, goes out to look for him. While Hays and his men have also decided to rest for the night, and to resume their journey early in the morning.

Vane determines to obtain the vials of titano for himself, and steals them from the sleeping Hays. Driscoll encounters Vane as he is examining the vials, and the two men have a bitter fight, ending when Vane's feet crashes down on the two vials on the ground, resulting in a sheet of flames that ends his life.

Just at this time the volcano breaks forth in a furious eruption. Bidding Gaspard and Igloo to wait at the outpost, Nan goes out to hunt for Driscoll.

Hays and his outlaws flee before the poisonous vapors coming from the volcano, but are overtaken and sink to the ground in the throes of death. Nan, unable to find trace of Driscoll, is also overcome, while at the outpost, the roof crashes in upon the unconscious Gaspard and Igloo.

Driscoll, losing his directions in the confusion, now looks off and sees the volcano in a final mighty eruption, streams of lava pouring forth from it, and then he too sinks to the ground, overcome by the deadly vapors.
